No-cost, free event

Program Description

Statutes frequently contain ambiguous or unclear language. When this occurs, researching the Legislature's intent in enacting a particular law often becomes necessary. In this class, learn how to research a California statute and gain resources to engage in basic legislative intent research yourself.

This course covers:

- Legislative history research: what it can do, why you need it
- The process of researching legislative history
- Key terms and the different types of documents that make up legislative history
- Determining the particular session law ("chapter") or bill number to research
